HE Noblemen, Gentlemen, Own-

HE Noblemen, Gentlemen, Owners, and Lesses of Coals, Merchants, Manufacturers, and others, associated during some years, for obtaining relief from the illegal exactions of Customhouse-fees in Scotland, with the Delegates from the different Counties who co-operate in this business, and those from any town or corporate, body who may chasten send them, are requested to never in Walker's Taylors. Writers Court, upon Wednesday the 7th day of March, at one o'clock afternoon.

This Meeting have to take into confideration, a report of a Commine ce appointed by the fall General Meeting, and to consider what surther steps should be taken for obtaining the unds of the Alforition.

A considerable partial relief, was obtained in 1784, upon the shipping of coals, and some other kinds of goods within the Forth, and upon the adjoining parts of the outer coast, equal, it is thought, in its confequences, for a facing of a hour 3000 it aryour totrade. But there still remains an illegal burthen, thought sit least equal to 5000 1 a years upon this frist, and the other parts of Soptland. It is not meant to fay, that the officers receive the whole of these summer to live and the still patches the trade is forced to bear the difference of the experience otherways.

It is well known, that dispatches and fees are exasted in numberless cases, though prohibited by saw, and not taken in England for the like business; and where sees can be legally taken, the rates of them amount to far higher, in many cases to ten, and sometimes to twenty fold of what are taken in England for the fame business.

The sees on our greatest native article of Coals when shiped to England, are double and triple of what they are at many cafes to ten, and fornetimes to twenty fold of what are taken in Bagland for the fame busines.

The fees on our greatest native article of Coals when shipped to England, are double and triple of what they are at Newcastle and Whitchaven upon much larger ladings; and these on the export of Coals (though no bonds be necessary) are incredible, being often equal to 16, 17, and even 20 percent, of the prime cost shipped.—This is so very grass an abuse, that the bare stating of sit to the Legislature, must, it is supposed, obtain reducts.

It is expected that a bill will be immediately brought into the House of Commons, for consolidating the Custom-bouse duties, and giveing relief to Merchauts; and by a steady application, it is hoped, that a clause may be obtained therein, for relief of the trade in Scotland, and for putting it on an equal sooting, with England, as to Custom-bouse-steen, in conformity with the Union. The officers, it is hoped, may also have a proper addition to their Islanies, which this Alfociation much with for, being very necessary in itself; and it will surely be for the benefit of the Revenue, as it is notorious, that wherever see are highest, the Revenue as it is notorious, that wherever fees are highest, the Revenue is therefore entreated and expected, that the Meeting will be well attended and numerous, fo that the present favourable opportunity may not be loft for obtaining re-

CONSOLIDATION OF THE CUSTOMS. THE Chancellor of the Exchequer opened the bufiness with observing, that he meant not to enter in-to any particular detail of the subject which he meant to flate for their approbation. He should confine himself merebiate such a general view of it as was necessary to checidate its principle, and the necessary of the expedient. In this he had to notice, that the collectors of the revenue had been greatly perplexed. and embarrafied by the variety of duties levied on the fame article. This intricacy was a great means of retarding that profecution of business which a country to commercial as this demanded. From the feveral modifications, corrections, additions, and alterations in the revenue, the merchant was frequently impeded in the transaction of his commerce. But how much greater would necessarily be their embarraffment, when the commerce of the country would be fo much extended, as would undoubtedly refult of the resolutions they had passed relative to opening a commerce with France. So great, indeed, had been the difficulty of ascertaining the preeife duty paid on any article, from its being neceffary to refer to the feveral particular duties levied at different periods on the faid article, that it was rather a subject of altonishment to him how so great a commerce as this country enjoyed was transacted with so much facility and expedition. Two causes, he said, could only be assigned for this. The one he faid, could only be augued for the was the habit in which the revenue officers appoint was the habit in which the duties were of having previously calculated the whole duty payable on any given commodity. The other was the confidence of the merchant and the collector in the statement or calculation specified. The first, he said, as far as the calculations were just, was not objectionable, but the latter he thought was. It was contrary to eve-ry idea of policy in the collection of the revenue to fusfier the officer or the collector to act as the agent for the merchant. Gentlemen might eafily conceive the impropriety of giving an officer such an opportu-nity of befriending the merchant; and as there was pollibility of controlling the faid officer in fuch estimates, he thought this was very hazardous to the efficacy of the revenue. From the general principle, he faid, with regard to the objects of reform in the revenue, it would be easily perceived those consisting of the Cultums, Excise, and Stamps, were the most immediately and indispensibly necessary. There were other branches of the revenue which he ranked under the title of miscellaneous articles. But as thefe were fomewhat dependent on the three great branches he had specified, in directing his purpose to them, the whole revenue, he conceived; would be relieved from the inconveniencies he had flated Before he proceeded to the feveral branches, he obferved, that the confolidating thefe duties, which be merely levying one aggregate fum to the account of the feveral duties on each commodity, as a change of revenue, he did not conceive it involved in it any political confideration. But when it was adverted to that, by thus simplifying the duties, the amount of the revenue would be more easily ascertained, he thought it would be of the greatif political confequence, with regard to any specuns necessary to be made in future by that in forming new taxes, confidering these relative a-mounts to other nations, and the proportion they had to our national exigencies. In such a point of view, he was convinced the prefent measure wow appear to every gentleman a most necessary expedi-

After thus opening the labject, he proceeded to consider in what manner he meant to effect this cosfolidation of duties in the feveral branches of the revenue. His first object was the duties of the Cuftoms. And to shew the perplexity and intricacy of the collection of the faid duties, he instanced the duty levied on tonnage by the 12th of Charles II. This duty when first levied was simply a duty of five per cent. on the value; but several acts having paffed fince, which altered, encreased, and transferred parts of the faid duty from the value to the capacity, weight, measure, &c. the collection of the said duty could not be ascertained but by the greatest trouble and difficulty. He mentioned this as an instance, whose principle pervaded almost every article of our revenue; and what he had to propo therefore, for the adoption of the Committee, was to repeal the present sublisting duties, and to enact in their fread one duty or subfirly to the amount as nearly as possible of the whole aggregate of what were on each article, whether subject to custom, excise, or stamp. In doing this, feveral duties would be found which contained fractions. In order to prevent any lofs from relinquishing these fractions, or perplexity by retaining them, it was his intention that the next integral number above the faid fraction (hould be taken. This, instead of causing any diminution of re-venue, might afford an encrease of about 20,000 li per annum, which would tend to defray certain ad-ditional expences caused necessarily by the intended confolidation. But he wished to observe, that he did not mean always to adopt the next integral num-ber above the fraction. Sometimes the next integral number below the fraction would be chofen. All he meant to intimate was, that in general the number above would be preferred to prevent any defalcarion of the revenue, or the diminution of the fecurity to the public creditor: for he thought thefe preferved in every measure relative to a ribbies of hich the public credit was to deeply involved.

Having observed in what manner he meant to proceed with regard to the Cultoms, the next sub-ject was the Excise. This branch, he observed, had not fo many articles; it would, therefore, be more easily confolidated than the Customs. But as feyeral of the articles fubject to the Excife had likewife feveral alterations, additions, and amendments, the evil demanded the fame remedy.

He next adverted to the Stamps, and observed his intention to simplify the complexity of their duties in the fame manner.

After thus going through the three branches of the revenue, he adverted to the politile objections posing the public creditor might lufter from lup-posing the public creditor might lufter from luch an alteration in the mode of collecting. But to pre-vent any such apprehensions, it was his intention to afford fufficient time for the public creditor to be apprized of the nature of the plan propoled, fo as to enable fuch as had any objections to the measure to offer them, or to proceed in any manner he might think more expedient for his interest. With regard to the fecurity of the public creditor, he was affured it would be the fame as before. He did not mean identically the fame—but in every parliamentary, political and national view, the fecurity for paying the interest of the public debrs would be e-To prove this, he went into a particular detail of the different funds, in order to evince in what manner the appropriated and collected duties would be allotted to those funds as they were before.— And if the receipts of the faid consolidated duties were more than what they now were, and applied as before to rendering them efficient to pay the an-nuities to their respective claimants, he could not fee in what the public creditor founded the least apprehensions of danger. The funds constituted for the payment of the interests of the public deht confifted of the Appropriated Fund, the South Sea, and the General Fund. From the furplus of the whole the Sinking Fund was formed, which was a collater ral fecurity for the payment of any deficiencies that might arile in any lublifting parts of the revenue.—

And as it had been always found equal, not only to ly every annuity claimed from either of the faid funds, but had even afforded a furplus, he could not perceive, while these funds existed, but that the public creditor must ever be secure of his an-

However, in paying these annuities, as some atteration must necessarily be the result of this change of fystem, and the manner of appropriating the duties might cause an alteration in the time of paying the half-yearly dividends, he had to state there were a part of the public annuitants that demanded a priority of payment. The part he meant were those whose annuities were in the three per cent. confols, the four per cent. and five per cent navy. But as the whole of these did not amount to more than 30,000,000 l. of the 240,000,000 L. which was the whole amount of the public debt, he thought there would be no great inconvenience or difficulty to the public creditors in general to provide for this

The manner in which he meant they should have the priority was, that fuch as had a dividend to receive at Christmas and Midfummer should have the power of receiving their quarter, due at Lady day and Michaelmas, without fuffering it to be accumulating until the subsequent quarters. He faid, another benefit would refult from this, which was the circulation it would cause from the earlier payment of these dividends among the public. In this past of his argument, he stated the several amounts of the annuities payable in each species of fund.

After staring the utility of the measure, and the fafity to the public creditor, he then informed the Committee that he did pot mean to enter into further particulars. He begged pardon for having been o-biged to trouble them fo long on a subject that he flattered himfolf was fo obviously necessary as to rereive the concurrence of every gentleman present.

With respect to the several rates contained in the volume before the Committee, to more their repeal feparately would require 4000 diffrict refolutions. This, he conceived, would be entirely unnecessary. And, in order to effect the purpose without any such delay, as moving to many refolutions would un-doubtedly occasion, he had, with the concurrence of the Committee, to propole that the feveral a-mounts of the different duties on the feveral articles in each branch of the revenue might be printed. And as they would contain merely the names and figures, he confidered it would not be fo large but ntlemen might eafily give it that attention a fubjed of fuch importance demanded, before they gave their final confent to the measure. Thus the Comminee would be enabled, if they faw any particular objection to any one article of duty or fubfidy, to propose it, without having every article read for their approbation. And as he conceived it would be scarcely possible for the said amount of the aggregate duties on each article to be printed foon enough to enable the Committee to read them before Wednefday, he should not think it necessary to resume this butiness again before Thursday, It was, confequently, his intention, if he might flatter himself with having the general confent and approbation of the Committee to the plan he had proposed, not then to move more than merely for leave to bring in a bill to repeal the present sublisting duties, and to lesy others in their flead, as near to the fame as it was possible to afcertain from the variety, perplexity, and intricacy of the prefent duties. After moving this, he thought the most eligible mode would be to report progress, and ask leave to fit again.

He then made his motion to the above purport, which being read by Mr Shute, was carried unanimoully.

The refolation being feconded,

Mr Burke rose to express his entire approbation of the motion. He said, that though he in general different from the Right Hon. Gentleman's one nions, he most fineerely coincided with the Jeto himnegociations of commerce, and to give eafe to the merchant, was undoubtedly an object of magnitude, and as fuch well worth the attention of the Legislature. The Right Hon. Gentleman was therefore entitled to the thanks of his country for having with fo much care and affiduity brought forward a pro fition, which appeared to be fo well calculated for answering those important ends, and he was entitled to the thanks of the House for having stated it with much ability and perspicuity. Mr S. Thurnton spoke in favour of the motion

Mr Fox faid, he did not rife to give any opposihow far Parliament were warranted in altering or alienation those funds, which had been expressly appropriated for the security of a certain description of the public creditors. He confessed, however, that the Right Hon. Gentleman had in a great degree anticipated his ideas on the fubject, by mentioning the objection, and answering it, by stating, that every creditor of the public should, in a future stage of the bufiness, have an opportunity of affenting or differting from the mode of fecurity which the alteration of the Customhouse laws would give him. This undoubtedly was a fair and equitable propolition, and it was what the public creditor had a right to expect. Ife would therefore fay nothing more on that subject till a future opportunity, when the business would come more fully under the deliberarion of the House. But there was another circumillance which he wished to be informed of. which was, how far the present motion was connested with the resolution which had lately passed respecting the commercial treaty with France

Mr Pitt faid, that undoubtedly the general mo-tion was connected with the French Treaty, but that as the one was a permanent, and the other a temporary measure, they would require a separate consideration, of which he would give timely notice to the House, after all the resolutions which he had to move were gone through.

Lord Penrybn affect, whether the refolutions

would include any alteration in the duties now paid on rum. Mr Pitt said, that he would take that subject into consideration when he came to that part of his plan which respected the Excise.

The resolution being moved, it was carried unahimoully, and the House adjourned. Tutsbay, Feb. 27.

The land and malt-tax bills were read the third Mr Stephenson took his feat for Carlifle. MR HASTINGS.

The order of the day being read for going into a Committee upon the charges against Mr. Hastings, the House resolved itself into a Committee, and Mr Middleton was called to the bar, when he delivered in a bundle of letters and papers respecting the transactions of Mr Haftings at Furruckabad.

Mr Burke defired to know of the witness, if those spers, which he now delivered at the bar, contained all the papers and correspondence which had paffen between him and Mr Hastings relative to those transactions? The witness answered, No. Where was the remainder? The witness apprehended they were left at Lucknow. Had he no copies? Was not politive whether ever any copies were made; but if there were, he could not find them. The witness was then directed to withdraw; after which the House resumed, the Chairman reported progress, and affeed leave to fit again.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE CUSTOMS. Mr Dempfter, after complimenting Mr Pitt upon his plan of confolidating the duties, defired to the whether he had included in the plan a more of method of palling coquets for goods transported fi one port to another in this kingdom; and whet the present difficulty respecting bonds given at the Customhouse, was within the Minister's contend

Mr Pitt replied, that at present be had not to ed his thoughts to those subjects.

Mr Dempfler rejoined, that in case the Minia did not bring that fubject forward, he should is felf be under the necessity of troubling the Hoste with a motion upon that head. At prefent, he filed the coasting traders, as well as their employers, he boured under great inconvenience and difficulty, EAST INDIA PETITION.

The order of the day was read for the House go into a Committee on the faid petition. The House was accordingly resolved into a Comm and Mr Dempfter moved, that courfel be called the bar in support of the faid petition, against the

Mr George Rouse and Mr Dallas were acm ingly ealled to the bar, when, with great force argument drawn from law and hiftory, they spokes upwards of two hours against the several clauses the faid bill. After counfel were withdrawn, Dempster moved that the Chairman do leave chair, report progress, and alk leave to se spin This brought on a general convertation, in which Mr Pitt infifted, that as business of very macen importance had been postponed, merely for the a their Counfel, and confider the nature of the plaint, that the House had an undoubted right expect a specific motion upon the subject-ma the petition; and the more especially as the was not fo far exhaulted as to render a deb the fubject inconvenient to the House. Heat fore moved an amendment to the motion, viz. The the Chairman do now leave the chair.

Mr Dempfler replied, that he had no intention of moving any question at present, and had informed his friends that he had nor; but he should take the first open day to move for leave to bring in a bill u amend and explain the acts of Parliament which the petitioners with so much justice complained of. A present the Committee was so this, and so many present the Committee was to train, and to many his friends had departed from the House, that the Mr. Hading the Contieman on the Tresh Bench pressed a decision at the present momen.

Mr Pitt in return observed, that it was very entire the many that it was very entire to the many than the many t traordinary conduct to press the Honse to adm Counsel to be heard at the bar, and after they ha been heard, that the effect of their learned and the quent speeches should be utterly fost upon the Con mittee, by the delay of the determination of the que ftion (if any question was really meant to be bro forward) to another day. However, this would be a lesson to the House, that it should not so read in future be induced to admit Counsel to the b upon every occasion.

Mr Dempfler, with honest warmth, urged, th the petitioners had a right to be heard at the b it being the first time that they had a possibility, or ing to their distance from the mother country; they could claim the rights of Englishmen, of heard against a bill that was oppressive to them he vidually, and hostile to the rights and liberiese Englishmen in general. Mr Sheridan, Mr Burke, and Mr Francis, sp ported Mr Dempfter in the most strennous mas on the other hand, Mr Dundas and the Solicin general contended, that as there was no specific motion before the House, the more particularly a Counsel had been fully heard, that it would be also gether as irregular for the Chairman to report gress, as to ask leave to sit again. The qui was then pur upon Mr Pitt's amendment, and on ried without a division; consequently, the case of the petitionees is for the present dropped.

EDINBURGH. Extract of a letter from London, Feb. 28. HOUSE OF COMMONS. MUTINY BILL.

" As foon as Mr Pitt came down, the order of the day was called for going into a Committee or the mutiny bill; and the Speaker quitting the chair, the House went into a Committee accordingly, and Mr Rose took his place at the table.

"Col. Pitzpatri. k rose, and, in a speech of confiderable length, opposed the bill in respect to the obnourable Gentleman went into a hiltory of the bill, and gave an account of the discussion it underwent last year. He remarked, that the House were bound to view the bill with a jealous eye; and a very learned Judge of high authority (Sir William Blackstone) had given it as his opinion, that the mutiny bill stood much in need of a revision. It bught, the Hon. Gentlemen faid, to be rather abridged than extended or enlarged. After forme more preliminary matter of this nature, he proceeded to derstood to be this : - In the year before last, the objects to be brought under the mutiny bill were, officers muftered and paid;" and fait year they were described to be officers " in commifion and paid." The Hon. Gentleman observed, that this latter description being still continued, he would bee trave to move an amendment, which was, that the bill should only include "officers mustered and or-dered on service." What the Hon. Gentleman had to complain of was, that the bill, as brought in, went to complain of was, that the bill, as brought in, went to bring officers by brevet under martial law, which the Hon. Gendeman thought entirely wrong, as half pay officers were not pretended to be within the mutiny sill. The Hon. Gentleman was of opinion, that no officer should be liable to the mutiny bill unless in actual fervice. He instanced the case of the officers ferving in the militia, who while embodied, he faid, it was true, were under martial law, but who ceased to be so the moment they were difembodied. He mentioned the case of General Ross to strengthen his opinion, that officers by breved were not confidered as coming within the mutiny bill, that general officer, merely on account of his being by bravot, not being held amenable to a Court-Martial. He also mentioned the case of General Stuart in the East Indies. The Hon, Gentleman said many other things by way of supporting his opinion, that no officer should be under military law but those in actual fervice, and moved his amendment as a means of answering every purpose, which was, that the words, "officers in countillion and paid," should be omitted, and the words, " officers muffered and ordered on fervice," be substituted in their stead.

" Mr Francis seconded the motion, and observed, that the making officers by brevet hable to the mutiny bill would be directly against the constitu-tion, and he explained himself in this mode of reafoning. He faid, the constitution did not know of. much less allow of any forces but those raised by order of the legislature; and as the officers on brevet received no pay, they could not come under the muting bill, as all the forces embodied by order of Panliament received pay. The Hon, Gentleman faid this was so well understood, that even a private man could not be tried by a court-martial, unless he had actually received pay.

4 Sir Charles Gould, Judge Advocate, in a long fpeech, explained the rule of fervice, and contended, that the bill gave no new ftretch of power, for that officers by brevet always had been confidered as within the mutiny bill. They had aways thought fo within the mutiny bill. They had aways thought for themselves, and he had never thought any otherwise. He remembered, he said, two general officers, by brevet, who had actually sat on two court martials. With respect to half-pay officers, he thought they were not excluded from the service by their halfpay. That it was given them, not as a reward for their fervices, but as a retainder in his Majesty's fervice; and, he added, that in cases of rebellion, and of muriny, and on any other occasion, both officers by brevet, and balf pay officers, might take command of any of his Majesty's forces. The Hon. Bart. faid, that officers on brevet, fo far from being offended by being confidered as within the mutiny all, thought it an honour to them; and he maintained, that it was for their advantage; for if they was not within the mutiny bill, his Majetty might, by his prerogative, difmils them; and they would furely fooner have the privilege of being tried by a court-martial.

". Sir Ceorge Yonge went partly over the fame ground, and contended, that officers by breast had ever been confidered as within the mutiny bill; and that half-pay officers were still in his Majesty's fer-

Mr Francis enforced what ly had before obser-

" Mr Fox rose with some warmth, and infilted on it, that half-pay officers had never been confidered as within the mutiny act, and that officers by brevet ought to be equally excluded from it. He treated observation of the Advocate-general, that officers by brevet might, though without any order of fervice, take any command of his Majesty's forces on cases of emergency, as deferving no fort of notice, as any half-pay officers might do the fame; or, indeed, any other person might, in case of rebellion, or mutiny, take the command of any body of meu he could muster together for the purpose of suppressing the one, or quelling the other; but he contended, that the only proper objects of the bill were officers on

astual fervice:

"Sir George Howard was of opinion, that officers by brevet had always confidered themselves as under the mutiny bill, and he believed every one in the service was of the same opinion.

"Captain Phipp, spoke on the same side, and at half-past six o'clock, the debate was becoming very depth.

Tuesday morning, died here, Mrs ElizaBeth Wal-kinshaw, daughter of the deceased John Walkinthaw, Efq; of Barrowfield.

Thursday the Court of Session had under confideration, objections flated against some gentlemen who had voted at the late election of a member to ferve in Parliament for the county of Renfrew, whose votes came under the denomination of being nominal and fictitions, created for the express purying any real property in faid county. Their Lord-flips delivered their opinions with grear ability, and at confiderable length, after which, on a divition, feven against fix, the Court was pleased to sustain the objections against a number of the voters on both sides, who fell under the description abovementioned, and found they were not entitled to vote at the election for Renfrew. A few of the votes objected to, were alledged by the Conofel at the bar to mand on a different footing from those above-mentioned, being purchased for certain sums of money; these were reserved for the farther consideration of the Court, and a proof of the sums paid by each voter ordered to be produced by Tuesday. The number of nominal and sicinious vores which have been declared bad, are nearly equal on both fides. --The judges who voted to fulfain the votes, were fully lendble of their bad tendency; at the fame time, they were of opinion, that as the law flood, it was not in the power of the Court to reject them ; but the majority of their Lord hirs were of opinion, that they were not supported by law, and therefore ought not to be sustained. This decision may probably pave the way for settling the important point which has long been so keenly agreed. Who have, or have not, a tille to vote at elections for counties? and polibly may put an end to fuch mushroom votes, which have long been complained of as a grictance, and highly differential to this country.

LINTSEED.

Tuffees Office, Edinburgh, Feb. 26, 1787. HE Commissioners and Trustees for Fisheries, Mar. THE Commissioners and Trustees for Fisheries, Manufactures, and Improvements in Scotland, think it proper to give this public notice to the Importers o, or Dealers in Lintsed, that unless the feed be in a wholefome state, proped i cleaned, without mixture, and free of every noxious weed, before being exposed to fale for sowing, or if it be offered to fale under a wrong denomination, either as to its age, of the country ware it grew, all such feed is liable by the law to seizure, and that the officers employed by the Trustees have particular orders to look after the same.

The Trustees having learned, that a considerable quantity of Memel Lintseed has been imported this season, and that it is meant to be fold for sowing, they consider it to be their daty to acquaint the public, that they have undoubted information, that the forestid species of seed, though repeatedly tried, has generally failed to produce even a tolerable crop in this country; that it grows shorter, and more unequally than any other Lintseed; and that it is deemed to be the same which in the act of Parliament is called Short Seed.

The Lands and Barony of REDCASTLE, lying in the parifices of Kilernan and Kilmuir-wester, and county of Ros. Thefe lands hold of the Crown, and are valued in the cessbooks of the county at 1491 l. At a moderate conversion of the victual, they yield of yearly rent about 12001, Sterling; and being very extensive, and still in their natural state, they are capable of great improvement. Their situation is uncommonly agreeable. They lie along the manigable frith of Beauly which bounds them on the south, for the space of about five miles. They are distant from the burgh of Inversions about five miles. They are diftant from the burgh or threanefs only about two miles. The foil is of an exceeding good quality, dry and healthy; and, owing to the fouth exposure, the crops are more early than in the most footherly parts of Scotland. The mansion-house is fit to accommodate a large family. The gardens are extensive, and yield fruits of all kinds in great plenty; early, and of the best quality. There is a considerable fairmon-fishing upon the estate, and white fin, and stell-sish of all kinds. The low country game upon it is plenty; and all forts of Highland game within a few miles of it. There is some natural wood, and the plantations upon the estate are extensive, and in thriving condition.

Any of the tenants upon the estate will shew the lands; about five miles. They are distant from the burgh of Inver-
